The Senator cited the case of Bulgaria to show that lack of money would not prevent aggressive warfare. Bulgaria, he pointed cut, had fought two wars and was fighting its third war within a few years, after the two previous struggles had each "bankrupted the nation."

"But," Senator Borsh asked, "does the Senator reelly believe that we may be attacked out of a rpirit of pure aggression?"

"It is not so much attack as bullving I fear," replied the white-haired Mississippian. "If this is to be a question of an actual attack I decline to answer. I do not wish to bring a great international issue into the dust of political

The attack I fear will amount only to bullying at first. But the American people will not stand bullying. There have been plenty of delicate questions raised—the attacks on merchant ships, the blockade and others. There will be plenty for the diplomats to talk about. And their discussion will be limited exactly by the strength of our navy. Now, if the American people had sense enough to stand bullving and let it go at that it might be all right. But they haven't got that kind of sense, and I, for one, am not hungering and thirsting to have them get it.

individual interest, but along what are intended to be the direct and searching lines of truth itself, was a very for tunate language in which to express this community of interest and of sympathy.

this community of interest and of sympathy.

"But, ladies and gentlemen, our thought cannot pause at the artificial boundaries of the fields of science and of commerce. All boundaries that divide life into sections and interests are artificial, because life is all of a piece. You cannot treat part of it without by implication and indirection treating all of it, and the field of life any more than the field of life any more than the field of life any more than the field of commerce is to be distinguished from the general field of life.

Passion the Enemy of Truth

field of commerce is to be distinguished from the general field of life.

Passion the Enemy of Truth.

"No one who reflects upon the progress of science, or the extension and perfection of any of the practical arts of life, can fall to see that there is only one atmosphere that these things can breathe, and that is an atmosphere of mutual confidence and of peace and of ordered political life among the nations. Amidst war and revolution even the voice of science must for the most part be silent, and revolution even the very roots of everything that makes life go steadily forward and the light grow from generation to generation. For nothing stirs passion like political disturbance, and massion is the eventy of truth.

"These things were realized with peculiar vividness and said with unusual eloquence in a recent conference held in this city for the purpose of considering the financial relations between the two contestnats of America because it was perceived that financiers can do nothing without the cooperation of governments, and that if meritant the community of political interests there is a community of political interests.

"I hope I can make clear to you in what sense I use those evends. I do not mean a mere partnership in the obtings that are expedient. I mean, what I was trying to indicate a few moments ago, that you cannot separate politics from these things, that you cannot separate politics from these things, that you cannot separate politics from these things, that you cannot commune unless you are friends, in the community of politics in the can make clear to you in what sense I use those clear to you in the was trying to indicate a few moments ago, that you cannot separate politics from these things that are expedient. that swould deal with one another, laws must agree with one another, laws must agree with one another, that you cannot make laws vary without making them contradict, and that amidst contradictory laws the easy flaw of commercial intercourse is impossible, and that, therefore, a financial congress naturally led to all the inferences of politics. For politics I conceive to be nothing more than the science of the ordered progress of society along the lines of greatest usefulness and convenience to itself.

"The conference to which I have referred marked the consciousness of the two Americas that economically they are very desendent upon one another; that they have a great deal that it is very desirable they should exchange and share with one another; that they have kept unnaturally and unfortunately separated and spart, when they had a manifest and obvious community of fears and suspicions on this score a manifest and obvious community of fears and suspicions on this score
